what lies at the center of the mexican colonial experience should mexican colonial society be construed as a theoretical monolith capitalist from its inception or was it essentially feudal as traditional historiography viewed it in this pathfinding study Enrique Semó offers a fresh vision that the conflicting social formations of capitalism, feudalism and tributary despotism provided the basic dynamic of Mexico's social and economic development responding to questions raised by contemporary Mexican society. Semó sees the origin of both backwardness and development not in climate, race or a heterogeneous set of unrelated traits but rather in the historical interaction of each social formation. In his analysis Mexico's history is conceived as a succession of socioeconomic formations each growing within the womb of its predecessor. Semó sees the task of economic history to analyze each of these formations and to construct models that will help us understand the laws of its evolution. His premise is that economic history contributes to our understanding of the present not by formulating universal laws but by studying the laws of development and progression of concrete economic systems. The history of capitalism in Mexico opens with the conquest and concludes with the onset of the profound socioeconomic transformation of the last fifty years of the colony, a period clearly representing the precapitalist phase of Mexican development. In the course of his discussion Semó addresses the role of dependency, an important theoretical innovation, and introduces the concept of tributary despotism relating it to the problems of Indian society and economy. He also provides a novel examination of the changing role of the church throughout Mexican colonial history. The result is a comprehensive picture which offers a provocative alternative to the increasingly detailed and monographic approach that currently dominates the writing of history. Originally published as Historia del capitalismo en México in 1973, this classic work is now available for the first time in English. It will be of interest to specialists in Mexican colonial history as well as to general readers.

This collective volume explores the ways merchants managed to connect different spaces all over the globe in the early modern period by organizing the movement of goods, capital, information and cultural objects between different commercial maritime systems in the Mediterranean and Atlantic basin. Merchants and trade networks in the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, 1550-1800 consists of four thematic blocs: theoretical considerations, the social composition of networks, connected spaces, networks between formal and informal exchange as well as possible failures of ties. This edited volume features eleven contributions which deal with theoretical concepts such as social network analysis, globalization, social capital and trust. In addition, several chapters analyze the coexistence of mono-cultural and transnational networks, deal with network failure and shifting network geographies and assess the impact of kinship for building up international networks between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic. This work evaluates the use of specific network types for building up connections across the Mediterranean and the Atlantic basin stretching out to Central Europe, the Northern Sea and the Pacific. This book is of interest to those who study history of economics and maritime economics as well as historians and scholars from other disciplines working on maritime shipping, port studies, migration, foreign mercantile communities, trade policies and mercantilism.
