with the introduction of more aggressive policing prosecution and sentencing since the late 1970s the number of americans in prison has increased dramatically while many have credited these get tough policies with lowering violent crime rates we are only just beginning to understand the broader costs of mass incarceration in barriers to reentry experts on labor markets and the criminal justice system investigate how imprisonment affects ex offenders employment prospects and how the challenge of finding work after prison affects the likelihood that they will break the law again and return to prison the authors examine the intersection of imprisonment and employment from many vantage points including employer surveys interviews with former prisoners and state data on prison employment programs and post incarceration employment rates ex prisoners face many obstacles to re entering the job market from employers fears of negligent hiring lawsuits to the lost opportunities for acquiring work experience while incarcerated in a study of former prisoners becky pettit and christopher lyons find that employment among this group was actually higher immediately after their release than before they were incarcerated but that over time their employment rate dropped to their pre imprisonment levels exploring the demand side of the equation harry holzer steven raphael and michael stoll report on their survey of employers in los angeles about the hiring of former criminals in which they find strong evidence of pervasive hiring discrimination against ex prisoners devah pager finds similar evidence of employer discrimination in an experiment in which milwaukee employers were presented with applications for otherwise comparable jobseekers some of whom had criminal records and some of whom did not such findings are particularly troubling in light of research by steven raphael and david weiman which shows that ex criminals are more likely to violate parole if they are unemployed in a concluding chapter bruce western warns that prison is becoming the norm for too many inner city minority males by preventing access to the labor market mass incarceration is exacerbating inequality western argues that ultimately the most successful policies are those that keep young men out of prison in the first place promoting social justice and reducing recidivism both demand greater efforts to reintegrate former prisoners into the workforce barriers to reentry cogently underscores one of the major social costs of incarceration and builds a compelling case for rethinking the way our country rehabilitates criminals

This book provides an overview of the incarceration of tens of thousands of men, women, and children during the first fifty years of Irish independence. Psychiatric hospitals, mother and baby homes, Magdalen homes, reformatory, and industrial schools, prisons, and borstal formed a network of institutions of coercive confinement that was integral to the emerging state. The book, now available in paperback after performing superbly in hardback, provides a wealth of contemporaneous accounts of what life was like within these austere and forbidding places, as well as offering a compelling explanation for the longevity of the system and the reasons for its ultimate decline. While many accounts exist of individual institutions and the factors associated with their operation, this is the first attempt to provide a holistic account of the interlocking range of institutions that dominated the physical landscape and, in many ways, underpinned the rural economy, highlighting the overlapping roles of church, state, and family in the maintenance of these forms of social control. This book will appeal to those interested in understanding twentieth-century Ireland, in particular historians, legal scholars, criminologists, sociologists, and other social scientists. These arguments take on special importance as Irish society continues to grapple with the legacy of its extensive use of institutionalisation.

Coercive Confinement in Post-Independence Ireland 2014-04-16

The second world war between the Axis and Allied powers saw over 20 million soldiers taken as prisoners of war. Prisoners of war uses a series of case studies to illuminate the personal and collective histories of those who experienced captivity in eastern and western Europe during the war and their repatriation and reintegration afterwards.

in most countries problematic drug use is dealt with primarily as a criminal justice issue rather than a health issue accordingly a large proportion of people in prison have a history of alcohol tobacco and or illicit drug use and despite the best efforts of correctional authorities some continue to use these substances in prison often in very risky ways after release from prison many relapse to risky substance use and are at high risk of poor health outcomes preventable death or reincarceration in this edited volume for the first time we bring together 40 contributors from 10 countries to review what is known about alcohol tobacco and illicit drug use in people who cycle through prisons and the harms associated with use of these substances we consider some evidence based responses to these harms both in prison and after return to the community and discuss their implications for policy reform this book is international in scope and multi disciplinary in character it brings together and integrates the perspectives of public health and addictions researchers criminologists and correctional leaders epidemiologists physicians and human rights lawyers our contributors are unified in their commitment to evidence informed policy that is doing what we know works an overarching theme pervading all of the chapters is that people who cycle through prisons come from the community and almost always return to the community their health problems are therefore our health problems in other words prisoner health is public health this landmark and compelling book follows the stories of 15 000 australian prisoners of war from the moment they were released by the japanese at the end of world war ii their struggle to rehabilitate themselves and to win compensation and acknowledgement from their own country was just beginning this moving book shows that the battle within was both a personal and a national one prize winning historian christina twomey finds that official policies and attitudes towards these men were equivocal and arbitrary for almost forty years the image of a defeated and emaciated soldier held prisoner by people of a different race did not sit well with the mythology of anzac drawing on the records of the prisoner of war trust fund for the first time this book presents the struggles of returned prisoners in their own words it also shows that memories of captivity forged new connections with people of the asia pacific region as former pows sought to reconcile with their captors and honour those who had helped them a grateful nation ultimately lauded and commemorated pows as worthy veterans from the 1980s but the real story of the fight to get there has not been told until now millions of servicemen of the belligerent powers were taken prisoner during world war ii until recently the popular image of these men has been framed by tales of heroic escape or immense suffering at the hands of malevolent captors for the vast majority however the reality was very different their history both during and after the war has largely been ignored in the grand narratives of the conflict this collection brings together new scholarship largely based on sources from previously unavailable eastern european or japanese archives authors highlight a number of important comparatives whereas for the british and americans held by the germans and japanese the end of the war meant a swift repatriation and demobilization for the germans it heralded the beginning of an imprisonment that for some lasted until 1956 these and many more moving stories are revealed here for the first despite broad scholarship documenting the compounding effects and self reproducing character of incarceration ways of conceptualising imprisonment and the post prison experience have scarcely changed in over a century contemporary correctional thinking has congealed around notions of risk and management this book aims to cast new light on men s experience of release from prison drawing on research conducted in australia it speaks to the challenges facing people leaving prison and seeking acceptance amongst the non imprisoned around the world johns reveals the complexity of the post prison experience which is frequently masked by constructions of risk that individualise responsibility for reoffending and reimprisonment this book highlights the important role of community in ex prisoner integration in providing opportunities for participation and acceptance johns shows that the process of becoming an ex prisoner is not simply one of individual choice or larger structural forces but occurs in the spaces in between being and becoming an ex prisoner reveals the complex interplay between internal and external meanings and practices that causes men to feel neither locked up nor wholly free it will appeal to scholars and students interested in desistance criminology criminological or penological theory sociology and qualitative research methods the rate of acute drug related mortality or overdose deaths among prisoners in the immediate post release period is unacceptably high such incidents result from many factors including decreased tolerance after a period of relative abstinence during imprisonment and the concurrent use of multiple drugs which with every additional illicit drug consumed in combination with opioids nearly doubles the risk of death from opioids other important factors are the lack of pre release counselling post release follow up and failure to identify those at risk substance dependence is a chronic disorder with high relapse rates and often requires long term continuous treatment there is good evidence from trials and cohort studies that opioid substitution treatment reduces the risk of overdose among opioid users this report identifies the main areas that need to be improved in order to decrease the risk of death linking prison health and public health systems closely is essential to mitigating this risk recommendations for preventive responses are considered across all levels of the justice system the report includes a literature review that identifies a substantial body of research from various countries this research supports the finding that the initial post release period presents ex prisoners with a significantly heightened risk of acute drug related mortality one strategy for reducing the risk of recidivism in ex prisoners is the provision of treatment services and support to prisoners during their incarceration and after their release this approach is gaining prominence in australia and internationally it recognises that prisoners are confronted by a range of social economic and personal challenges that can be barriers to a crime free lifestyle this paper examines various issues linked to the provision of post release services to prisoners drawing on both international literature and a round table discussion held at the Australian Institute of Criminology in October 2003

during the civil war each side accused the other of mistreating prisoners of war today most historians believe that there was systemic and deliberate abuse of POWs by both sides yet many base their conclusions on anecdotal evidence much of it from postwar writings drawing on both contemporaneous prisoner diaries and Union Army documents some newly discovered the author presents a fresh and detailed study of supposed mistreatment of prisoners at Fort Delaware one of the largest Union prison camps and draws surprising conclusions some of which have implications for the entire Union prison system the committee undertook this inquiry to address concerns about the imprisonment of welsh prisoners outside wales at present there are only four prisons in wales all in the south and there is little provision for juveniles and no prisons for women the overcrowding means that welsh prisoners have a reduced chance of serving their sentence near home and reduces the chances of successful resettlement on release the committee believe there should be new prison places in north wales separate provision for young offenders and a new approach to women prisoners along the lines suggested by baroness corston the report also address concerns about support services for mental illness amongst prisoners the amount of welsh language provision and education services
