these are the questions which this book sets out to answer today it can be read and enjoyed in its historical context written by a mum just like you use this book as your guide through every step of motherhood revisit it as many times as you need to this book is written for you to empower you guide you draw that confidence out in you in this book you will gain a space for self reflection steps to manage mummy burnout effective ways to manage negative thoughts and feelings how to manage expectations understanding of why goal setting is important a sense of purpose the confidence and focus to take action now how to live a balanced life sarah edwards is an experienced probation officer mum of 2 and an expert tutor in psychology criminology sociology for a levels undergrad and postgraduate sarah's vision is to empower mums and students across the world this important and original new book reports on a major investigation of the outcomes of probation supervision is concerned with the key question of what works in probation and comes at an important moment of change and development for the probation service in the uk unlike previous studies which have relied mostly on official data this book makes use of over 200 interviews with men and women on probation and their supervising probation officers rethinking what works with offenders has the following objectives to understand probation work from the perspectives of those who deliver it and those to whom it is delivered to study probation intervention as a whole in particular the probation order rather than specific aspects to locate probation work in the wider social contexts of those on probation to analyse how probation works and to reconceptualise probation outcomes in terms of degrees of success rather than as successful or unsuccessful to assess the policy implications of these conclusions this book presents an important and challenging range of findings on what works in probation and with offenders and will be essential reading for anybody professionally concerned with the present and future of probation raises central issues at a critical time for the reorganised national probation service based on extensive research including 200 interviews essential reading for anybody interested in what works in probation the golden age of probation is the first book on probation by those practitioners who became its leaders a comprehensive account exploring culture values and tensions it looks at the dynamics of probation supervision and political dimensions including the shift to a market driven form of public service a lively and challenging collection of writings by those at the very heart of the probation service for 50 years complete with descriptions of life at all levels of what has been described as the jewel in the crown of criminal justice moral and other challenges are presented alongside those of standing up to government ministers whose aspirations for political immortality have led to profound tensions the book describes how tough talk and market strategies have undermined 100 years of devoted public service and ideas about how best to help change the lives of some of the most marginalised people in society equality race and social deprivation are amongst the issues explored as the ethos of probation and its deeply rooted values are laid bare in a book that deals with highs and lows hazards innovation hopes aims and the international influence of an organization whose original mission not always popular was to advise assist and befriend those otherwise heading for prison and a life of crime colourful and highly readable the golden age of probation takes the reader on a journey through england and wales exposing social disadvantage unrest and increasingly london centric policies it records first hand what life was like for those at the sharp end during an era of extensive progress development and change from the book the price of the semi privatised probation estate is that probation has lost its umbilical cord with the courts the police the prosecution service and our partners in local authorities it will be difficult for the courts in particular to understand the transforming rehabilitation agenda when services for low and medium risk offenders will be carried out by an origami of commissioned enterprises whose experience for the most part is in the private sector of running prisons mostly in the USA and whose staff may not necessarily have the qualifications to properly assess and supervise known offenders John Harding CBE Chapter 10 although the restructure made the service vulnerable to later changes through the 2000 Act it did achieve better consistency reduced costs in due course more women at the top and a national programme of assessment and interventions that was internationally ground breaking the mistake in my view was to abandon this direction later that decade combine with the prison service under the banner of offender management and sacrifice the national probation influence that had been gained because of the nature of the caseload with most offenders on community orders we have always had more joint work with police and local authorities than with the prison service personalities and some bad judgements however got in the way Mary Anne McFarlane Chapter 14 for the last three decades probation just like health and education has been caught up in the dynamics and mechanisms of creating pseudo pseudo markets to deliver public services the underlying philosophy might appear to be simply to get the cost of these things off the government's balance sheet but the structures created to do this are not transparent enough for a real assessment to be made of the true financial costs at the same time organizational targets and protocols have helped stifle initiative and even the capacity to care Roger Statham Chapter 18 there were deep personal motives for John Hedge's original decision to enter the probation service as a young social science graduate in 1970 his own mother a struggling publican had been put on probation during his youth and he had seen how the service can prevent a criminal conviction from ruining a life beyond repair he spent the next 37 years working to try to give offenders a chance and help them move away from crime and find their way to a law abiding existence the barriers to success were all too often the attitudes of police and sentencers the state of prisons and the prejudices of ignorant or biased politicians this is a candid account of those years of hard work frustration and occasional triumph first published in 1998 this volume examines risk in probation practice through consideration of the context the risk differences and how to reconcile them Hazel Kemshall responds to a recent crisis in the probation service of offenders committing crimes while on probation prompting a re-evaluation of risk assessment of offenders with the potential for probation the volume will be of interest to staff and managers involved in probation work this book explores key issues in relation to parole and public opinion including the relevance of public opinion to parole boards decision making and strategies for increasing public confidence in parole it presents the findings of semi-structured interviews with 80 members of parole authorities in 12 jurisdictions across Australia New Zealand Canada and Scotland unlike judicial processes which are open to the public there is little awareness of and research on the work of parole authorities this book therefore shines a light on a little understood but hotly contested aspect of the criminal justice system specifically it explores differences across the study jurisdictions and considers how parole authorities in the four study countries view public attitudes as well as the role of the media in shaping public attitudes towards parole the book also considers whether public reaction matters for parole board decision making and the interplay between informing the public and offender reintegration it explores a range of strategies which may improve public confidence in parole and therefore the criminal justice system more broadly this includes consideration of the value definition and possibility of public confidence the authors then discuss both passive forms such as parole authority websites publication of decisions and social media before examining active forms of engagement including an information liaison officer roadshows and community fora in 1907 the probation of offenders act introduced a system which allowed offenders to be rehabilitated at home under supervision rather than being sent to prison this book explores how the probation system was used to regulate the private lives emotions and behaviours of people in Britain between 1907 and 1962 access to the private sphere both physically and psychologically meant that the probation system was particularly well suited to offences related to intimate and personal relations with each chapter focusing on a particular type of offence including wife assault attempted suicide male sexual offences and female prostitution settle shows how experiences of the probationers were shaped by the everyday practices of probation and assesses the extent to which probation was successful in rehabilitating offenders and protecting the public also examining the role of probation officers in marriage reconciliation the book explores how ideas about gender and domesticity were crucial to both the process of rehabilitation and the endeavour to make the home a safe environment in which these domestic ideals could come into fruition probation and policing of the private sphere in Britain enriches our understanding of the role of the state in policing monitoring and promoting the well being of its citizens and explores the nuances of probation's dual purpose as a form of social control as well as a social work service designed to help the most vulnerable in society redemption rehabilitation and risk management provides the most accessible and up to date account of the origins and development of the probation service in England and Wales the book explores and explains the changes that have taken place in the service the pressures and tensions that have shaped change and the role played by government research napo and key individuals from its origins in the nineteenth century up to the plans for the service outlined by the conservative liberal Democrat government the probation service is a key agency in dealing with offenders providing reports for the courts that assist sentencing decisions supervizing released prisoners in the community and working with the victims of crime yet despite dealing with more offenders than the prison service at lower cost and with reconviction rates that are lower than those associated with prisons the probation service has been ignored misrepresented taken for granted and marginalized and probation staff have been sneered at as do gooders the service as a whole is currently under serious threat as a result of budget cuts organizational restructuring changes in training and increasingly punitive policies this book details how probation has come to such a pass by tracing the evolution of the probation service redemption rehabilitation and risk management not only sheds invaluable light on a much misunderstood criminal justice agency but offers a unique examination of twentieth century criminal justice policy it will be essential reading for students and academics in criminal justice and criminology
