the principles theory introduced by ronald dworkin and developed further by robert alexy is at the centre of various debates in legal philosophy and legal theory in the controversy over the concept of law the argument from principles is advanced on behalf of a necessary connection between law and morality in legal argumentation the balancing of principles increasingly complements the classical methods of law application the enquiry into weighing and balancing principles has led to important insights into the principle of proportionality which for its part has proven to be of great importance in constitutional law european law and various other branches of law this arsp supplement brings together a number of contributions that address central aspects of the principles theory the christian difference to the legal order is not to be found in any religious test or requirement of conformity but in the christian character of legal institutions stahl accomplishes this by making institutions rather than actions the cornerstone of law law is a general rule not a specific command and institutions not persons are its primary object persons operate within the framework established by law but that law is an external objective framework not an internal subjective one the right of the person and the rights of persons are established and defended precisely by this objectively christian order therefore what is christian about this legal order is the principles the law ideas upon which it is based not the level of faith of those living within it this christian orientation also demands a respect for the inheritance of the nation conservation of its received institutions and laws law is rooted in custom and tradition supplemented through legislation the courts are bound to the law as the expression of the historical people not ephemeral public opinion the major error of modern legal philosophy is its natural rights orientation which makes law and the state into the creatures of individual choice in which individuals through a social contract choose to leave the state of nature and form a government and a set of laws under which to be ruled this whole approach is oblivious to the fact that human social order being an inheritance is a higher order transcending individual choice modern legal philosophy compounds its error by making natural law into a directly applicable legal standard or alternatively by abandoning the law to the play of interests cutting off any influence from higher principles for its part natural law lacks objectivity universal recognition and publicity in the sense that it can be known by everyone ahead of time it therefore cannot be enforced by the state in fact to do so is to establish opinion and thus injustice as law god s divine order is the archetype of law but it is not directly applicable as law in fact god commands that the law as it stands is to be obeyed regardless of its correspondence to the higher principles of law human freedom under god is the freedom to crystallize and make concrete those god revealed principles of law as a positive legal order in this second edition of principles of law there is no difference in content as compared with the first but the text has been corrected where necessary and improved where appropriate

Principles of Contract Law

this new textbook outlines the general principles of the rapidly developing subject of the law of restitution restitution is concerned with the reversing of unjust enrichment and was recently recognized as a discrete body of law by the house of lords although restitutionary principles have in fact been evolving for over 200 years rather than taking the traditional approach which assumes that restitutionary remedies will be awarded against a defendant only where it can be shown that the defendant has been unjustly enriched at the expense of the plaintiff the book asserts that the law of restitution is simply concerned with the question of when restitutionary remedies may be awarded that is remedies which are assessed by reference to a benefit obtained by the defendant but in determining whether restitutionary remedies are available it is necessary to identify the causes of the action which triggers them there are three such causes of action namely the reversal of the defendants unjust enrichment the commission of a wrong by the defendant and the vindication of the defendants property rights the state of the law is examined through analyses of the statutory provisions and key cases demonstrating the way the law is used to resolve a wide variety of legal problems the very different views of academics as to the nature and ambit of the subject are also identified this book will be invaluable to students on restitution courses at every level excerpt from the first principles of law the aim of this book is to set out in as plain and simple a manner as possible and in what the author ventures to think is a somewhat more philosophical arrangement than the usually accepted one of blackstone the most general and elementary principles of the law it was written primarily for the use of the author's students beginning the study of the law but it is hoped that it may be of service to students of law elsewhere as well as possibly to readers who without intending to become lawyers wish to get a knowledge in outline of the nature and methods of legal science it is not designed to take the place of the larger and more complete treatises with which students generally begin their legal studies but rather to be used in connection with them and for this reason many subjects have been omitted such as agency partnership and the greater part of the law of persons which though of the greatest interest and importance in themselves may still be looked upon as being so to speak detachable from the main fabric of legal principles and affording merely special applications of rules and principles which the student ought to understand before he comes to the study of those special branches
