geddes was incontestably a man of great learning and independence of mind and his work as a pioneer of modern biblical scholarship is one of the greatest historical importance j g macgregor yet the work of this eighteenth century scholar is largely unknown today though his name is often linked with the fragment hypothesis of pentateuchal composition which he initiated and which was developed by vater but perhaps his most significant contribution is in the field of mythology at the moment when j g eichhorn was himself engaged in this development making full use of contemporary sources and drawing upon hitherto unpublished material dr fuller writes the first full scale study of this remarkable man who with courage not unmixed with rashness stood almost alone in his endeavours to introduce principles of literary and historical criticism into bible study in britain the alexander romance is a difficult text to define and to assess justly from its earliest days it was an open text which was adapted into a variety of cultures with meanings that themselves vary and yet seem to carry a strong undercurrent of homogeneity alexander is the hero who cannot become a god and who encapsulates the desires and strivings of the host cultures the papers assembled in this volume which were originally presented at a conference at the university of wrocław poland in october 2015 all face the challenge of defining the alexander romance some focus on quite specific topics while others address more overarching themes they form a cohesive set of approaches to the delicate positioning of the text between history and literature from its earliest elements in hellenistic egypt to its latest reworkings in the byzantine and islamic middle east the alexander romance shows itself to be a work that steadily engages with such questions as kingship the limits of human and greek nature and the purpose of history the romance began as a history but only by becoming literature could it achieve such a deep penetration of east and west
