Sites Unseen 2018-07-03 from a dive bar in new orleans to a leafy residential street in minneapolis many establishments and homes in cities across the nation share a troubling and largely invisible past they were once sites of industrial manufacturers such as plastics factories or machine shops that likely left behind carcinogens and other hazardous industrial byproducts in sites unseen sociologists scott frickel and james elliott uncover the hidden histories of these sites to show how they are regularly produced and reincorporated into urban landscapes with limited or no regulatory oversight by revealing this legacy of our industrial past sites unseen

spotlights how city making has become an ongoing process of social and environmental transformation and risk containment to demonstrate these dynamics frickel and elliott investigate four very different cities new orleans minneapolis philadelphia and portland oregon using original data assembled and mapped for thousands of former manufacturers locations dating back to the 1950s they find that more than 90 percent of such sites have now been converted to urban amenities such as parks homes and storefronts with almost no environmental review and because manufacturers tend to open plants on new non industrial lots rather than on lots previously occupied by other manufacturers associated hazards continue to spread relatively unabated as they do residential turnover driven by gentrification and the rising costs of urban living further obscure these sites from residents and regulatory agencies alike frickel and elliott show that these hidden processes have serious consequences for city dwellers while minority and working class neighborhoods are still more likely to attract hazardous manufacturers rapid turnover in cities means that whites and middle income groups also face increased risk since government agencies prioritize managing polluted sites that are highly visible or politically expedient many former manufacturing sites that now have other uses remain invisible to address these oversights the authors advocate creating new municipal databases that identify previously undocumented manufacturing sites as potential environmental hazards they also suggest that legislation limiting urban sprawl might reduce the flow of hazardous materials beyond certain boundaries a wide ranging synthesis of urban and environmental scholarship sites unseen shows that creating sustainable cities requires deep engagement with industrial history as well as with the social and regulatory processes that continue to remake urban areas through time a volume in the american sociological association s rose series in sociology

Civic Engagement in Food System Governance 2015-10-05 the local food movement is one of the most active of current civil engagement social movements this work presents primary evidence from over 900 documents interviews and participant observations and provides the first descriptive history of local food movement national policy achievements in the us from 1976 to 2013 and in the uk from 1991 to 2013 together with reviews of both the american and british local food movements it provides a us uk comparative context significantly updating earlier comparisons of american british and european farm and rural policies the comparative perspective shows that over time more effective strategies for national policy change required social movement building strategies such as collaborative policy coalitions capacity building for smaller organizations and policy entrepreneurship for joining together separate rural farming food and health interests in contrast narrowly defined single issue campaigns often undermined long term policy change even if short term wins emerged by profiling interviews of american and english movement leaders policymakers and funders the book demonstrates that democratic participation in food policy is best supported when funders incentivize groups to work together and overcome their differences

The Production of Space in Latin Literature 2018-03-16 recent decades have seen a marked shift in approaches to cultural analysis with the critical role of location and spatial experience in the formation of the human subject gaining increasing prominence henri lefebvre s la production de l espace 1974 a seminal work in what is now called the spatial turn in the humanities stresses that space is to be included among the sites of hegemonic power and ideological contestation in a society it is not simply a neutral setting within which human action takes place this idea has obvious relevance to the study of ancient rome in which space was formative yet also contested and could be endowed with cultural meaning by the uses its citizens made of it and the ways in which they put it into play this volume applies the insights and concerns of the spatial turn to this specifically roman engagement with space and explores its representation and manipulation in latin literature the terrain covered by the contributions is broad both temporally from catullus to st augustine and in terms of genre with lyric epic elegy satire epistolography and historiography all finding their place discussions focus mainly on movement and the mobile subject in the experience and making of space rather than fixed monumental space within which a subject moves and acts offering a detailed exploration of roman engagement with space the ideological stakes of this engagement and its intersections with empire urbanism identity ethics exile and history the volume contains a wealth of insights for readers across and beyond the discipline of classical studies those looking equally for new approaches to ancient texts and authors or to explore the relationship between the materiality of antiquity and its literary aspects will find these discussions illuminating
