Encyclopedia of Death and Dying 2003-12-16 When life meets death is a book of stories from people who have faced the ordinary yet overwhelming experience of the death of a loved one. Some are the stories of the author's own loss, and others are based on his professional experience as a chaplain. This book tells the story from the perspective of those who are immersed in the experience. Some of these stories are as common as the expected death of an elderly and ailing parent, while others are as traumatic as the loss of a loved one in the Oklahoma City bombing disaster. They are not objective truths about death, so much as they are tales about the meaning and the mystery of people who must face the death of someone they love. There are a number of ways to tell the truth about life, but no way is more powerful than the use of story. There are some human experiences that are too deep for words; only the majesty of a story can point to their meaning. The moment of death is such a time; the stories in When Life Meets Death are categorized into four sections that represent different times along the continuum of the experience of death. These include: on the way, the time prior to death when perhaps for the first time the truth of this final reality is evident and the sacredness of life is made clear; at the moment, the transition from life to eternity is a time of good byes, tells the tale of what it is like to say this final good-bye when death is traumatic; traumatic death is horrible for the one who dies, and it leaves the survivors with conflicting feelings of grief, anger, and futility when it's over; the process of finding a new normal after death and eight steps of the grieving process. There is, of course, always an explanation for death; we can verify that death occurred, how it came about, and when it happened. We need these kinds of truths, but death is never only a scientific reality; it marks the end of how one life was intricately woven into the lives of many others. This kind of truth is recorded in the stories we tell about the one who died. When Life Meets Death will disarm you so that truth and wisdom can find natural ways to enter your heart and soul. It heals, even as it calls forth sorrow.

Dying, Death, and Bereavement 1996 all my life long i have been singularly destitute i believe of that physical shrinking from death which so many human beings feel so acutely i do not mean that i am in any hurry to die as long as things go on tolerably well with me in the world i have no insuperable objection to continue living but whenever i stand face to face with death as has happened to me several times in the course of my career i regard the prospect of annihilation with perfect equanimity i can honestly declare that all such occasions my only doubts and fears have been for the safety and the pecuniary position of the survivors especially of those more immediately dependent upon me for myself i have never felt one moment s disquietude and i attribute this entire absence of fear of death to the unusual fact that i have once already tried dying and found it by no means a painful or terrifying experience i mean what i say quite literally i have not the slightest hesitation in asserting that once in my life i really and truly died died as dead as it is possible for a human being to die that that i was afterwards resurrected i have felt and know the whole feeling of death not part of it only but the actual end of dying i did not stop halfway i died and was done with it and when i came back to life again it was no mere case of awaking from which is foolishly called suspended animation but a genuine revival a restoration of vitality to a man as dead as he ever can be or will be
