this book is not to be mistaken for an apology not at all if i have lived fully and richly i thank god for it my only regrets are for the things that i have not done and for the experiences i have not had also for the people i have not known i believe absolutely that living in the completest sense of that word discovering the full beauty of living and plunging one s self utterly into the human beings that swarm through this life is a pure art it is i honestly think the highest artistic accomplishment we can hope for all the recognised arts your paintings your sculpture your music your books all those things are only the symbols of that higher art living i have been accused of living adventurously let us admit the word but i have never been an adventuress if i have never cared about your man made conventions and every modern school girl would laugh at those of my day i was not immoral but un moral if i have often loved i have at least loved well and fully i have nothing to be ashamed of in spite of the scandalous press reports that hopeful reporters managed to use to amuse a scandal loving public and if i have dared to stick my nose into trouble just because the game was fun does it make me a brazen hussy no this is not an apology it is the recollections of a woman who is no longer young and who has crowded a great deal of movement and fun and action and love and adventure into a lifetime now drawing towards its close and if i could live it again this very long life of mine i would love to do so and the only difference would be that i would try to

crowd in still more more places more things more women more men more love more excitement let the mrs grundys arch their eyebrows and reach for their smelling salts
