whether we are male or female young or old a young boy's search for respect is something we can all relate to the search for significance is an innate desire that permeates our choices even though we don't always realize it especially when what we bring to the table our natural strengths aren't so obvious and positive attention isn't so automatic and so it was with curio this is a story of an adolescent's search for himself told through the bedtime talks between a single widowed father and his son not only does it portray a healthy relationship between father and son it uncovers many of the paradoxes associated with our search for a respectful identity each night dad spurs his son on like Jesus would have with just enough insight to prod curio's desire for more until finally curio surprises his father with wisdom straight out of heaven itself

this book explores agency reconciliation and minority return within the context of ethnic cleansing in bosnia it focuses on a community in north west bosnia which successfully reversed the worst episode of ethnic cleansing prior to Srebrenica by fighting for return and then establishing one of the only successful examples of contested minority return in the town of Kozarac the book is a result of a longitudinal decade long study of a group of people who discovered a remarkable level of agency and resilience largely without external support and despite many of the people and institutions who were responsible for their violent expulsion remaining in place re making kozarac considers how a community s traumatic experiences were utilised as a motivational vehicle for return and contrasts their pragmatic approach to local compromise with the ill informed and largely unsuccessful international projects that try to cast them as powerless victims importantly the book offers critical reflections on the interventions of the trauma and reconciliation industries which can be more harmful than is currently realised it will be of great interest to scholars of criminology anthropology and international relations
