New Perspectives on Faking in Personality Assessment 2011-08-22

hardly anything in psychology is as irking as the trait concept psychologists and laypersons alike use primarily adjective trait names to characterize and even conceptualize the individuals they encounter there are more than a hundred well defined personality traits and a great many questionnaires for their assessment some of which are designed to assess the same or very similar traits little is known about their ontogenetic development and even less about their underlying dynamics psychoanalytic theory was invoked for explaining the psychodynamics underlying a few personality traits without however presenting sufficient empirical evidence for the validity of these interpretations in a reductionistic vein behaviorally inclined psychologists have propounded the thesis that all traits are acquired behaviors yet this view neither reduces the number of personality tests nor explains the resistance of traits to modification by means of reward and punishment dissatisfied with these and some other less well known approaches to personality traits we decided to explore whether applying our psychosemantic theory of cognition to the trait concept would do better the way we had to follow was anything but easy

The Complete Personality Assessment 2011-10-03

originally published in 1983 and written in the tradition of the british school of psychology spearman burt eysenck cattell this book from a well known author was exceptional at the time in its attempt to wed quantification and psychological theory in the study of personality the student is presented with a discussion of the different methods of measuring personality and the various findings which have been made the results are then discussed in the light of psychological theories of personality and here the author stresses the need for a theory with a properly quantified bias however the emphasis on findings from measurement and not the measurement itself makes the book psychological truly about personality and not simply another text on psychological measurement
