an insightful examination of why we compare ourselves to those above and below us the united states was founded on the principle of equal opportunity for all and this ethos continues to inform the nation s collective identity in reality however absolute equality is elusive the gap between rich and poor has widened in recent decades and the united states has the highest level of economic inequality of any developed country social class and other differences in status reverberate throughout american life and prejudice based on another s perceived status persists among individuals and groups in envy up scorn down noted social psychologist susan fiske examines the psychological underpinnings of interpersonal and intergroup comparisons exploring why we compare ourselves to those both above and below us and analyzing the social consequences of such comparisons in day to day life what motivates individuals groups and cultures to envy the status of some and scorn the status of others who experiences envy and scorn most envy up scorn down marshals a wealth of recent psychological studies as well as findings based on years of fiske s own research to address such questions she shows that both envy and scorn have distinctive biological emotional cognitive and behavioral characteristics and though we are all wired for comparison some individuals are more vulnerable to these motives than others dominant personalities for example express envy toward high status groups such as the wealthy and well educated and insecurity can lead others to scorn those perceived to have lower status such as women minorities or the disabled fiske shows that one s race or ethnicity gender and education all correlate with perceived status regardless of whether one is accorded higher or lower status however all groups rank their members and all societies rank the various groups within them we rate each group as either friend or foe able or unable and accordingly assign them the traits of warmth or competence the majority of groups in the united states are ranked either warm or competent but not both with extreme exceptions the homeless or the very poor are considered neither warm nor competent societies across the globe view older people as warm but incompetent conversely the very rich are generally considered cold but highly competent envy up scorn down explores the nuances of status hierarchies and their consequences and shows that such prejudice in its most virulent form dehumanizes and can lead to devastating outcomes from the scornful neglect of the homeless to the envious anger historically directed at tutsis in rwanda or jews in europe individuals groups and even cultures will always make comparisons between and among themselves envy up scorn down is an accessible and insightful examination of drives we all share and the prejudice that can accompany comparison the book deftly shows that understanding envy and scorn and seeking to mitigate their effects can prove invaluable to our lives our relationships and our society sickle cell and thalassaemia are among the world's most common genetic conditions they are especially common in africa brazil the caribbean the middle east and asia they affect all ethnic groups but they particularly impact on minority ethnic groups in north america europe and australasia much research has focused on clinical laboratory and genetic studies of these conditions through a wide ranging selection of readings based on social scientific research into sickle cell and thalassaemia this book seeks to redress this imbalance this is important as through an examination of the different social economic and cultural contexts of the lives of people living with sickle cell or thalassaemia the contributors demonstrate that people are more than the sum of their genes and that their life experiences are rarely derived solely from the clinical severity of their condition but depend on the social context of their lives genetics and global public health presents a new concluding chapter which highlights the critical nature of social science research for sickle cell and thalassaemia communities providing key insights into the social contexts of human behaviour and analysing how societal arrangements could change to assist people living with either condition it will be of great interest to postgraduate and research students as well as professionals working in the field of public health this book was originally published as a special issue of the journal ethnicity and health a study of what motivates humans and the activity that gives rise to human social life and social structures in his 2010 book What is a Person? Christian Smith argued that sociology had for too long neglected this fundamental question prevailing social theories he wrote do not adequately capture our deep subjective experience as persons crucial dimensions of the richness of our own lived lives what thinkers in previous ages might have called our souls or hearts building on Smith's previous work Flourish or Destruct examines the motivations intrinsic to this subjective experience why do people do what they do how can we explain the activity that gives rise to all human social life and social structures Smith argues that our actions stem from a motivation to realize what he calls natural human goods ends that are by nature constitutionally good for all human beings he goes on to explore the ways we can and do fail to realize these ends a failure that can result in varying gradations of evil rooted in critical realism and informed by work in philosophy psychology and other fields Smith's ambitious book situates the idea of personhood at the center of our attempts to understand how we might shape good human lives and societies praise for Flourish or Destruct this major work in sociology theory should be read by social scientists in all disciplines highly recommended choice to flourish or destruct poses a powerful and important challenge to the entire discipline of sociology Smith is becoming the anchor of a humanist renewal in sociology and although he is not alone in this movement what makes Flourish or Destruct different is a coherent new oppositional perspective that draws on critical realism to affirm both human personhood and the ever present moral element in human affairs Smith's personalism could become the banner around which a very different kind of sociology develops one that respects the centered consciousness that is human personhood douglas porpora drexel university this book represents a major advance in sociology and more specifically within critical realism which is gradually emerging as a full fledged alternative in the social sciences i am fundamentally convinced by this book george steinmetz university of michigan
