argues that a range of behaviors such as murder suicide terrorism and

mass shootings are better understood as motivated by suicidal impulses than by homicidal ones mass shooters often display behaviors that strongly mirror the warning signs for suicide lives led in isolation intense personal suffering disaffection and struggle letters detailing why they did what they did paint pictures of intense misery and loneliness as this book makes clear private despair sometimes leads to social violence in this groundbreaking work thomas joiner offers a unified theory of suicide making the case that many acts that appear homicidal are best understood primarily as suicidal we must recognize that there are several forms of suicidal violence some of which masquerade as other types of acts including terrorism and murder these include suicide by cop suicide terrorism murder suicide and running amok though there are obvious differences among these acts joiner argues that framing them as stemming from a common ideology of suicide is a crucial step in preventing these atrocities by recognizing the desire to die not to kill as being at the heart of many of the acts of those who choose to kill their partner shoot up their school or terrorize their community we can offer more effective measures of intervention at a time when our nation is scrambling for solutions in the fight to end gun violence this book presents a crucial component in the detection and treatment of unwell individuals
