provided for this neglected group and with approximately 40 000 people with sci in the uk this is a cause for concern the overall aim of this project is to appraise the nutritional advice provided to adults with sci living in the uk and to identify limitations with this advice multiple methods are selected sources of nutritional advice n 11 are selected by purposive sampling and compared for consistency using directed content analysis a cross sectional web based survey is provided to people with sci n 69 via convenience sampling and enables their views to be investigated regarding the adequacy and relevance of nutritional advice provided to them their responses are analysed using simple frequency counts and basic content analysis the results of the analysis of the webbased survey reveal inadequacies regarding the nutritional advice that people with sci had been provided with in terms of its delivery timing form content and extent to which it was approved by people with sci it also shows that secondary health conditions were very important determinants of food choice for people with sci thus potentially encouraging them to follow nutritional advice nutritional advice provided to people with sci in the uk shows great inconsistency there is also limited evidence to suggest that it is inadequate but relevant for people with sci to follow due to these findings the health of people with sci is at great risk people with sci are predisposed to becoming overweight and obese because paralysis is thought to decrease their energy requirements by affecting all three components of energy expenditure this textbook presents up to date strategies for transdisciplinary teams working with children who have multiple disabilities included in this practical guide is expanded information on developing an inclusive curriculum integrating health care and education programs using assistive technology planning transitions and addressing

Pediatric Digestive Surgery 1992 master s thesis from the year 2008 in the subject medicine public health grade distinction 75 0 course msc international public health nutrition language english abstract the present work focuses on the nutritional advice provided to people with spinal cord injuries in the uk people with spinal cord injuries sci have unique nutritional needs due to their predisposition to obesity and chronic diseases bowel and bladder related health concerns pressure sores and osteoporosis currently there are no evidence based nutrition guidelines provided for this neglected group and with approximately 40 000 people with sci in the uk this is a cause for concern the overall aim of this project is to appraise the nutritional advice provided to adults with sci living in the uk and to identify limitations with this advice multiple methods are selected sources of nutritional advice n 11 are selected by purposive sampling and compared for consistency using directed content analysis a cross sectional web based survey is provided to people with sci n 69 via convenience sampling and enables their views to be investigated regarding the adequacy and relevance of nutritional advice provided to them their responses are analysed using simple frequency counts and basic content analysis the results of the analysis of the webbased survey reveal inadequacies regarding the nutritional advice that people with sci had been provided with in terms of its delivery timing form content and extent to which it was approved by people with sci it also shows that secondary health conditions were very important determinants of food choice for people with sci thus potentially encouraging them to follow nutritional advice nutritional advice provided to people with sci in the uk shows great inconsistency there is also limited evidence to suggest that it is inadequate but relevant for people with sci to follow due to these findings the health of people with sci is at great risk people with sci are predisposed to becoming overweight and obese because paralysis is thought to decrease their energy requirements by affecting all three components of energy expenditure
