awarded third place for the adam gillon book award in conrad studies 2009 the book presents a sustained critique of the interlinked and contradictory views that the fiction of joseph conrad is largely innocent of any interest in or concern with sexuality and the erotic and that when conrad does attempt to depict sexual desire or erotic excitement then this results in bad writing jeremy hawthorn argues for a revision of the view that conrad lacks understanding of and interest in sexuality he argues that the comprehensiveness of conrad s vision does not exclude a concern with the sexual and the erotic and that this concern is not with the sexual and the erotic as separate spheres of human life but as elements dialectically related to those matters public and political that have always been recognized as central to conrad s fictional achievement the book will open conrad s fiction to readings enriched by the insights of critics and theorists associated with gender studies and post colonialism hypersexual is a novel written from inside the experience of lifelong sexual compulsions and the often threatening circumstances involved in obtaining daily and frequently deviant sexual contact unhesitating and intimate the story also exposes surprisingly empowered achievements and triumphs in the tucked away realms of hypersexual pursuit and struggle led by the astonishingly honest character rory who adores his wife and children as much as he does his secret sexual life the journey eventually unfolds into an intricate modern romance in presenting a newly angled social perspective the story also explores plausible solutions for the continuing repression of and the staggering lack of legal and accessible sexual contact options for our adult population and further ideas for better sexual education in our culture from the earliest possible ages are examined both of which could effectively reduce sex crimes in our country challenging from the first sentence and disturbingly relevant throughout this is a pushing new horizons novel about social sexuality that begs to be read excerpts i am one of the millions of whom i ve already referred to as hypersexual s which is a word i made up as a young teenager to try to describe myself i can see now that i was simply trying to categorize myself in some understandable way and i can also see now how imprecise categories and labels are but what i saw back then is that there are some humans like myself who want need have sex of some kind almost every single day every time we can often multiple times with multiple different partners per day every week every month and every year of our lives we also dream of sex constantly there are to be sure far too many variations of hypersexuals to cover with any kind of blanket statement there are so very many nasty nooks niches fetishes fancies compulsions and variant needs and many hypersexuals willingly feed among a host of those deviant extensions i m defensive about my creation and cee cee s because i believe that sometimes nature creates a kind of genius out of madness sometimes in an attempt toward balance and sometimes to save itself
