Stuck in Transition 2017-02-27 the large scale transformation of kazakhstan s power sector following independence in 1991 was reflected by the country s move toward liberalizing the market and implementing sector regulation as an early adopter of a liberalized multimarket model consisting of bilateral spot balancing ancillary and capacity submarkets kazakhstan s power sector was regarded a market reform leader among countries of the former soviet union having achieved a much improved supply and demand balance and service quality however despite the noteworthy headway sector reforms remain predominantly as unfinished business the excess generation capacity that was inherited from the former soviet union at a time when the energy only market prices were too low to attract serious investors has masked the need to reflect on the long term outlook of the country s power production as the investment crunch unfolded in the mid 2000s a diverging concern almost immediately arose that is the capacity additions of existing and planned generations may not be sufficient to keep pace with the perpetuating and significant increase in the demand for power instead of applying market mechanisms to allow prices to rise and reflect the underlying supply and demand gap the gok addressed the issue by implementing administrative command and control measures this study draws on the world bank s long standing engagement in kazakhstan s energy sector and a number of recent technical assistance and advisory support activities the study aims to i objectively identify the principal challenges faced by the kazakhstan power sector in its ongoing transition and outlining potential policy options and ii draw lessons from kazakhstan s experience in sector reforms for the broader international audience the study covers broader sector issues including long term least cost power system planning supply and demand balancing tariff setting market structure and integration of renewable energy

Stuck in Place 2008-07 in the 1960s many believed that the civil rights movement s successes would foster a new era of racial equality in america four decades later the degree of racial inequality has barely changed to understand what went wrong patrick sharkey argues that we have to understand what has happened to african american communities over the last several decades in stuck in place sharkey describes how political decisions and social policies have led to severe disinvestment from black neighborhoods persistent segregation declining economic opportunities and a growing link between african american communities and the criminal justice system as a result neighborhood inequality that existed in the 1970s has been passed down to the current generation of african americans some of the most persistent forms of racial inequality such as gaps in income and test scores can only be explained by considering the neighborhoods in which black and white families have lived over multiple generations this multigenerational nature of neighborhood inequality also means that a new kind of urban policy is necessary for our nation s cities sharkey argues for urban policies that have the potential to create transformative and sustained changes in urban communities and the families that live within them and he outlines a durable urban policy agenda to move in that direction
