with much of the world's population facing restricted access to adequate medical care how to allocate scarce health care resources is a pressing question for governments hospitals and individuals how do we decide where funding for health care programs should go tannsjo here approaches the subject from a philosophical perspective balancing theoretical treatments of distributive ethics with real world examples of how health care is administered around the world today tannsjo begins by laying out several popular ethical theories utilitarianism which recommends maximizing the best overall outcome egalitarianism which recommends smoothing out the differences between people as much as possible and the maximin leximin theory which urges people to give absolute priority to those who are worst off tannsjo shows how in abstract thought experiments these theories come into conflict with each other and reveal puzzling implications he goes on to argue however that when we consider health care in the real world these theories all agree on a central point in a well ordered welfare state more resources should be directed to the care and cure of people suffering from mental illness and less to the marginal life extension of elderly patients tannsjo's book thus recommends a shift in spending to increase fairness and overall utility while also recognizing that this kind of dispassionate suggestion with its purely economic foundation is unlikely to take hold in policy tannsjo's analysis is a case study in how ethical theories can sometimes lead to rational conclusions and recommendations that we are not prepared to accept political theorists typically define political action in terms of rational potential rather than conflict and for this reason neglect the partisan nature of political experience this volume redresses this neglect focusing on the interrelated questions of whether the task of political theory is to find some means of containing partisan politics and whether political theory is itself separate from partisan politics each section of the book corresponds to one of three ways of conceiving the optimal or necessary relationship between political theory and partisan political struggle the first section considers the extent to which partisan politics requires constitutional consensus and the degree to which such a consensus requires correct theoretical underpinnings the second focuses on the compatibility of theoretical deliberation with partisan politics and the third on the possibility that political theory is itself necessarily a form or means of partisan engagement the end result is a theoretically diverse but focused debate on this important but neglected subject contributors include william e connolly mary g dietz adolf g gundersen john g gunnell donald s lutz edward bryan portis arlene w saxonhouse ruth lessl shively and thomas a spragens jr
