The Archaeological Imagination 2016-06-03 real understanding of past societies is not possible without including children and yet they have been strangely invisible in the archaeological record compelling explanation about past societies cannot be achieved without including and investigating children and childhood however marginal the traces of children s bodies and bricolage may seem compared to adults archaeological evidence of children and childhood can be found in the most astonishing places and spaces the archaeology of childhood is one of the most exciting and challenging areas for new discovery about past societies children are part of every human society but childhood is a cultural construct each society develops its own idea about what a childhood should be what children can or should do and how they are trained to take their place in the world children also play a part in creating the archaeological record itself in this volume experts from around the world ask questions about childhood thresholds of age and growth childhood in the material culture the death of children and the intersection of the childhood and the social economic religious and political worlds of societies in the past

Proceedings of the 6th International Congress of the Archaeology of the Ancient Near East: Excavations, surveys and restorations : reports on recent field archaeology in the Near East 2010 archaeological interpretation is an imaginative act stratigraphy and artefacts do not tell us what the past was like that is the task of the archaeologist the diverse group of contributors to this volume address the relationship between archaeology and imagination through the medium of historical fiction and fictive techniques both as consumers and as producers the fictionalisation of archaeological research is often used to disseminate the results of scholarly or commercial archaeology projects for wider public outreach here instead the authors focus on the question of what benefits fiction and fictive techniques as inspiration and method can bring to the practice of archaeology itself the contributors a mix of archaeologists novelists and other artists advance a variety of theoretical arguments and examples to advance the case for the value of a reflexive engagement between archaeology and fiction themes include the similarities and differences in the motives and methods of archaeologists and novelists translation empathy and the need to humanise the past and diversify archaeological narratives the authors are sensitive to the epistemological and ethical issues surrounding the influence of fiction on researchers and the incorporation of fictive techniques in their work sometimes dismissed as distracting just so stories or even as dangerously relativistic narratives the use of fictive techniques has a long history in archaeological research and examples from the scholarly literature on many varied periods and regions are considered the volume sets out to bring together examples of these disparate applications and to focus attention on the need for explicit recognition of the problems and possibilities of such approaches and on the value of further research about them

The Oxford Handbook of the Archaeology of Childhood 2018-05-10 the question of ethnicity is highly controversial in contemporary archaeology indigenous and nationalist claims to territory often rely on reconstructions of the past based on the identification of cultures from archaeological remains in spite of the fact that many consider the association of remains with past ethnic groups to be hopelessly inadequate sian jones examines historical misuses of this type and argues that the archaeology of ethnicity has never really been subjected to any serious theoretical analysis she responds to the need for a reassessment of the ways in which social groups are identified in the archaeological record with a comprehensive and critical synthesis of recent theories of ethnicity in the human sciences in so doing she argues for a fundamentally different view of ethnicity as a complex dynamic form of identification requiring radical changes in archaeological analysis and interpretation

The Archaeological Journal 1850 rock art is one of the most visible and geographically widespread of cultural expressions and it spans much of the period of our species existence rock art also provides rare and often unique insights into the minds and visually creative capacities of our ancestors and how selected rock outcrops with distinctive images were used to construct symbolic landscapes and shape worldviews equally important rock art is often central to the expression of and engagement with spiritual entities and forces and in all these dimensions it signals the diversity of cultural practices across place and through time over the past 150 years archaeologists have studied ancient arts on rock surfaces both out in the open and within caves and rock shelters and social anthropologists have revealed how people today use art in their daily lives the oxford handbook of the archaeology and anthropology of rock art showcases examples of such research from around the world and across a broad range of cultural contexts giving a sense of the art s regional variability its antiquity and how it is meaningful to people in the recent past and today including how we have ourselves tended to make sense of the art of others replete with our own preconceptions it reviews past present and emerging theoretical approaches to rock art investigation and presents new cutting edge methods of rock art analysis for the student and professional researcher alike

Champa and the Archaeology of Mỹ Sơn (Vietnam) 2009 archaeologists are increasingly focusing on the transformation of artifacts from their use in the past to their appearance in the archaeological record trying to identify the natural and cultural processes that created the archaeological record we study today in classical archaeology attention to these processes received an impetus by Theodore Pena's 2007 monograph Roman Pottery in the Archaeological Record which considered how ceramic vessels were made used and stayed in use serving various secondary purposes before finally being discarded. Pena relied mainly on evidence from Roman Italy which raises the question of the impact of similar cultural forces on pottery from other periods and places his work accentuates the need to continue the process of building and developing explicit interpretive models of ceramic life histories in Mediterranean archaeology with a view to beginning to address these challenges the editors invited a group of specialists in the pottery of Greece and the rest of the Eastern Mediterranean to a colloquium in Athens in June 2008 asking the contributors to reconsider Pena's general models approaches and examples from their own particular geographic and cultural perspectives this publication constitutes the proceedings of this colloquium
