the book tells the unique story of Weizac, an early computer built by a new nation in the early 1950s. It was created in Israel even though the feasibility of this project was actually close to null when it was initially conceived in 1946. Unlike most of the early computer projects, it was privately financed mainly by the Jewish world community. The book draws on a wealth of documents and historical insights to reveal the processes and powers that led to the successful completion of the project and as well as its actual impact on scientific activities in Israel and on the rise of a local computing community. Based on archival data, the book shows how a synergy of personal dedication together with an organizational and national mission that links the Zionist vision with science and technology for the Jewish people helped to achieve a well defined goal. The book offers intriguing insights and refreshing perspectives to all readers interested in the Zionist movement or in the history of computing.

Galway was an Irish cob that wanted to be a cow horse. He liked doing all the things that a cow horse did and practiced until he was very good at it. However, when he and his owner went to a cow horse show, all the other horses laughed at him because he looked so different. He was very hurt but he couldn't leave. Then something happened and Galway got to show that sometimes being different can be just what is needed. Read and see how Galway saved the day. Wonderfully illustrated so even the youngest child can follow the adventures of this amazing horse.
