excerpt it is a strange thing that when i feel most fervently and most deeply my hands and my tongue seem alike tied so that i cannot rightly describe or accurately portray the thoughts that are rising within me and yet i am a painter my eye tells me as much as that and all my friends who have seen my sketches and fancies say the same i am a poor lad and live in one of the narrowest of lanes but i do not want for light as my room is high up in the house with an extensive prospect over the neighbouring roofs during the first few days i went to live in the town i felt low spirited and solitary enough instead of the forest and the green hills of former days i had here only a forest of chimney pots to look out upon and then i had not a single friend not one familiar face greeted me so one evening i sat at the window in a desponding mood and presently i opened the casement and looked out oh how my heart leaped up with joy here was a well known face at last a round friendly countenance the face of a good friend i had known at home in fact it was the moon that looked in upon me he was quite unchanged the dear old moon and had the same face exactly that he used to show when he peered down upon me through the willow trees on the moor i kissed my hand to him over and over again as he shone far into my little room and he for his part promised me that every evening when he came abroad he would look in upon me for a few moments this promise he has faithfully kept it is a pity that he can only stay such a short time when he comes whenever he appears he tells me of one thing or another that he has seen on the previous night or on that same evening just paint the scenes i describe to you this is what he said to me and you will have a very pretty picture book i have followed his injunction for many evenings i could make up a new thousand and one nights in my own way out of these pictures but the number might be too great after all the pictures i have here given have not been chosen at random but follow in their proper order just as they were described to me some great gifted painter or some poet or musician may make something more of them if he likes what i have given here are only hasty sketches hurriedly put upon the paper with some of my own thoughts interspersed for the moon did not come to me every evening a cloud sometimes hid his face from me last night i am quoting the moon s own words last night i was gliding through the cloudless indian sky my face was mirrored in the waters of the ganges and my beams strove to pierce through the thick intertwining boughs of the bananas arching beneath me like the tortoise s shell forth from the thicket tripped a hindoo maid light as a gazelle beautiful as eve airy and ethereal as a vision and yet sharply defined amid the surrounding shadows stood this daughter of hindostan i could read on her delicate brow the thought that had brought her hither the thorny creeping plants tore her sandals but for all that she came rapidly forward the deer that had come down to the river to quench their thirst sprang by with a startled bound for in her hand the maiden bore a lighted lamp i could see the blood in her delicate finger tips as she spread them for a screen before the dancing flame she came down to the stream and set the lamp upon the water and let it float away the flame flickered to and fro and seemed ready to expire but still the lamp burned on and the girl s black sparkling eyes half veiled behind their long silken lashes followed it with a gaze of earnest intensity she knew that if the lamp continued to burn so long as she could keep it in sight her betrothed was still alive but if the lamp was suddenly extinguished he was dead and the lamp burned bravely on and she fell on her knees and prayed near her in the grass lay a speckled snake but she heeded it not she thought only of bramah

it was far in january and a terrible fall of snow was pelting down the snow eddied through the streets and lanes the window panes seemed plastered with snow on the outside snow plumped down in masses from the roofs and a sudden hurry had seized on the people for they ran and flew and fell into each others arms and as they clutched each other fast for a moment they felt that they were safe at least for that length of time coaches and horses seemed frosted with sugar the footmen stood with their backs against the carriages so as to turn their faces from the wind the foot passengers kept in the shelter of the carriages which could only move slowly on in the deep snow and when the storm at last abated and a narrow path was swept clean alongside the houses the people stood still in this path when they met for none liked to take the first step aside into the deep snow to let the other pass him thus they stood silent and motionless till as if by tacit consent each sacrificed one leg and stepping aside buried it in the deep snow heap towards evening it grew calm the sky looked as if it had been swept and had become more lofty and transparent the stars looked as if they were quite new and some of them were amazingly bright and pure it froze so hard that the snow creaked and the upper rind of snow might well have grown hard enough to bear the sparrows in the morning dawn these little birds hopped up and down where the sweeping had been done but they found very little food and were not a little cold the present book is put forth as a sequel to the volume of hans c andersen s stories and tales it contains tales and sketches various in character and following as it does an earlier volume care has been taken to intersperse with the children s tales stories which by their graver character and deeper meaning are calculated to interest those children of a larger growth who can find instruction as well as amusement in the play of fancy and imagination though the realm be that of fiction and the instruction be conveyed in a simple form the series of sketches of what the moon saw with which the present volume opens arose from the experiences of andersen when as a youth he went to seek his fortune in the capital of his native land and the story entitled under the willow tree is said likewise to have its foundation in fact indeed it seems redolent of the truth of that natural human love and suffering which is so truly said to make the whole world kin the scientific revolution of the seventeenth century has often been called a decisive turning point in human history it represents for good or ill the birth of modern science and modern ways of viewing the world in what galileo saw lawrence lipking offers a new perspective on how to understand what happened then arguing that artistic imagination and creativity as much as rational thought played a critical role in creating new visions of science and in shaping stories about eye opening discoveries in cosmology natural history engineering and the life sciences when galileo saw the face of the moon and the moons of jupiter lipking writes he had to picture a cosmos that could account for them kepler thought his geometry could open a window into the mind of god francis bacon s natural history envisioned an order of things that would replace the illusions of language with solid evidence and transform notions of life and death descartes designed a hypothetical book of nature to explain how everything in the universe was constructed thomas browne reconceived the boundaries of truth and error robert hooke like leonardo was both researcher and artist his schemes illuminate the microscopic and the macrocosmic and when isaac newton imagined nature as a coherent and comprehensive mathematical system he redefined the goals of science and the meaning of genius what galileo saw bridges the divide between science and art it brings together galileo and milton bacon and shakespeare lipking enters the minds and the workshops where the scientific revolution was fashioned drawing on art literature and the history of science to reimagine how perceptions about the world and human life could change so drastically and change forever
