international development efforts aimed at improving girls lives and education have been well intended somewhat effective but ultimately short sighted and incomplete this is because international development efforts often operate under a reductive understanding of the term gender and how it influences the lives of girls and boys gender is more commonly conceived by international efforts as characteristics which are ascribed to girls as norms for behaviour in particular the analysis in gender trouble makers focuses on the social constructions of gender and the ways in which gender was reinforced and maintained through a case study in rural nepal in developing countries like nepal promoting access to and participation in existing formal education programme is clearly necessary but it is not in itself sufficient to transform gender power relations in the broader society when gender is properly addressed as a process then all stakeholders involved researchers governmental officials and community members can begin to understand and devise more effective ways to increase both girl and boy students enrollment participation and success in school

how can we really evaluate teacher effectiveness systems of teacher appraisal and evaluation are being created across the world in order to monitor and assess teacher performance but do the models used really give a fair evaluation based on international research the authors argue that teacher effectiveness is too narrowly conceptualised and methods of measuring it are not attuned to the real contexts in which teachers work they propose a model of differential teacher effectiveness which takes into account that teachers may be more effective with some categories of students than with others teachers may be more effective with some teaching contexts than others teachers may be more effective with some subjects or components than with others building on and developing previous research on models of teacher effectiveness and current theories the authors open up possible new debates which will be of interest to academics and researchers working in this area throughout the world
