Engaging the Bible in a Gendered World 2006-01-01 investigates the themes of recollection and commemoration in a new reading that engages with critical work on memory

John Milton's Epic Invocations 2000 genesis was a political document of the state and its major function was to exalt david and his monarchy not only with his own people but also among the other states of that world the scribes of the monarchy used many sources for this work and certainly the literary criticism of the past has helped us to isolate many of these sources however the view presented here is quite different from the older criticism in that the sources that were used in this work must date from before the exile this is obvious if the sources were used by the scribes of the davidic monarchy none of this can be said with dogmatic zest but we can at this point discuss some reasons why it seems possible to see genesis in this way from the introduction

The Elusive Presence 2000-03-09 filing petitions to the ruler was a common practice in the history of the middle east but despite its social and political importance the institution of mazalim the so called investigation of complaints has still not been subjected to adequate investigation neither its normative regulations and regional settings nor the petitions themselves as a source for political economic social and administrative history the petitioning system in pre modern and modern iran being no exception in contrast to royal decrees or official historiography these petitions reflect complaints of people from all social strata men and women farmers religious people and state officials urban and rural population including nomads the petitions thus express the perspective of common people their desires and grievances about tax collectors and governors about the malfunctioning of the legal system and the royal administration this book is based on a sample of petitions which were submitted to nasir al din shah between 1301 1883 and 1303 1886 and contains the texts of a selection of these petitions pertaining to the year 1301 1883 1884 as well as their classification and an analysis of the role and functioning of this institution
