George Orwell's vivid memoir of his time living among the desperately poor and destitute down and out in Paris and London is a moving tour of the underworld of society written when Orwell was a struggling writer in his twenties. It documents his first contact with poverty here he painstakingly documents a world of unrelenting drudgery and squalor sleeping in bug-infested hostels and doss houses of last resort working as a dishwasher in Paris's vile hôtel x surviving on scraps and cigarette butts living alongside tramps a star-gazing pavement artist and a starving Russian ex-army captain exposing a shocking previously hidden world to his readers. Orwell gave a human face to the statistics of poverty for the first time and in doing so found his voice as a writer.

the following excursion was undertaken for several reasons the first of which was that though i had been many times in paris before yet i had not once been there since the revolution and i was desirous of seeing how far a residence of a few years in france might be practicable and agreeable secondly a counter revolution or at least some violent measures were expected and i was willing to be there at the time if possible and lastly i wanted to examine the gardens near paris i must here premise that i sent for a passport from the secretary of state s office which i knew could do no harm if it did no good thinking i should have it for nothing and obtained one signed by lord grenville but at the same time a demand was made for two guineas and sixpence for the fees now as i have had passports from almost all the european nations all and every one of which were gratis i sent the pass back it was however immediately returned to me and i was told that a passport is never issued from that office without that fee even if the party asking for it changes his mind i paid the money and that is all i shall say about the matter
