David Kellogg Lewis (1913–2001) was one of the most influential philosophers of the twentieth century. He made significant contributions to almost every area of analytic philosophy, including metaphysics, philosophy of language, philosophy of mind, and philosophy of science, and set the agenda for various debates in these areas which carry on to this day. In several respects, he remains a contemporary figure, yet enough time has now passed for historians of philosophy to begin to study his place in twentieth-century thought. His philosophy was constructed and refined not just through his published writing but also crucially through his life-long correspondence with fellow philosophers, including leading figures such as D. M. Armstrong, Saul Kripke, W. V. Quine, J. J. C. Smart, and Peter van Inwagen. His letters formed the undercurrent of his published work and became the medium through which he proposed many of his well-known theories and discussed a range of philosophical topics in depth. A selection of his vast correspondence over a 40-year period is presented here across two volumes, structured in three parts. Volume 2 explores Lewis's contributions to philosophical questions of mind, language, and epistemology. The letters address Lewis's answer to the mind-body problem, propositional attitudes, and the purely subjective character of conscious experience, meaning, and reference, as well as grammar in language, vagueness, truth in fiction, the problem of scepticism, and Lewis's work on decision theory and rationality, among many other topics. This volume is a testament to Lewis's achievement in these areas and will be an invaluable resource for those exploring contemporary debates concerning mind, language, and epistemology.

this study of vocational education in advanced industrial countries contributes to two different areas of debate the first is the study of the diversity of institutional forms taken by modern capitalism and the difficulties currently surrounding the survival of that diversity rather than analysing economic institutions and governance in general the authors specifically focus upon the key area of skill creation the second theme is that of vocational education and training in its own right while sharing the consensus that the advanced countries must secure competitive advantage in a global economy by developing highly skilled work forces the authors draw attention to certain awkward aspects of this approach that are often glossed over in general debate 1 the employment generating power of improvements in skill levels is limited employment policy cannot depend fully on education policies 2 while the acquisition of skills has become a major public need there is increasing dependence for their provision on individual firms with government action being restricted to residual care for the unemployed rather than contributing at the leading edge of advanced skills policy covering france germany italy japan sweden the uk and the usa this book provides a unique approach to education and training within the broader political and economic environment as such it will appeal to students teachers and practitioners concerned with vocational training human resource management industrial relations and the sociology of the economy
