in psychology priming is a technique in which the introduction of one stimulus influences how people respond to a subsequent stimulus priming works by activating an association or representation in memory just before another stimulus or task is introduced priming is a phenomenon in which exposure to one stimulus influences how a person responds to a subsequent related stimulus these stimuli are often conceptually related words or images priming is the idea that exposure to one stimulus may influence a response to a subsequent stimulus without conscious guidance or intention the priming effect is the positive or negative effect of a rapidly presented stimulus priming stimulus on the processing of a second stimulus target stimulus that appears shortly after generally home definitions understanding priming in psychology an overview don't miss out follow psypost on linkedin priming a fundamental concept in psychology refers to the subtle yet powerful influence that exposure to one stimulus has on a person's response to another stimulus priming is a powerful tool in certain types of therapy especially cognitive behavioral therapy which trains the brain to enact new behaviors it can also be useful if you want to develop better study and work habits or train your brain for success priming can even decrease stress and help with anxiety and depression introduction priming is the presentation of an idea or information that can alter subsequent behavior it may be presented in the form of a word image sound or a more complex task for example presenting a word very briefly may make people faster at responding to that word or a related one in a subsequent task a broader range of phenomena in which an event triggers a subsequent behavior in this chapter some definitions of priming and the origins of the terms use in psychology are presented we conclude that unconscious behavioral priming is real while real involves mechanisms different from those typically assumed to cause the effect behavioral priming it's all in the mind but whose mind plus one priming is a nonconscious form of memory that involves a change in a person's ability to identify produce or classify
