the principles of psychology volumes 1 and 2 are the 1890 set of books by william james that are lovingly combined into one complete book here william james was an american philosopher and psychologist who trained to be a physician before going into psychology there are four methods from james book stream of consciousness james most famous psychological metaphor emotion later known as the james lange theory habit human habits are constantly formed to achieve certain results and will through james personal experiences in life the openings of the principles of psychology presented what was known at the time of writing about the localization of functions in the brain how each sense seemed to have a neural center to which it reported and how varied bodily motions have their sources in other centers the particular hypotheses and observations on which james relied are now very dated but the broadest conclusion to which his material leads is still valid which was that the functions of the lower centers beneath the cerebrum become increasingly specialized as one moves from reptiles through ever more intelligent mammals to humans while the functions of the cerebrum itself become increasingly flexible and less localized as one moves along the same continuum james also discussed experiments on illusions optical auditory etc and offered a physiological explanation for many of them including that the brain reacts by paths which previous experiences have worn and makes us usually perceive the probable thing i e the thing by which on previous occasions the reaction was most frequently aroused illusions are thus a special case of the phenomenon of habit in the use of the comparative method james wrote instincts of animals are ransacked to throw light on our own by this light james dismisses the platitude that man differs from lower creatures by the almost total absence of instincts there is no such absence so the difference must be found elsewhere james believed that humans wielded far more impulses than other creatures impulses which when observed out of their greater context may have appeared just as automatic as the most basic of animal instincts however as man experienced the results of his impulses and these experiences evoked memories and expectations those very same impulses became gradually refined by this reasoning william james arrived at the conclusion that in any animal with the capacity for memory association and expectation behavior is ultimately expressed as a synthesis of instinct and experience rather than just blind instinct alone lovingly typeset for readability into two columns all original figures inserted both content pages have been moved to the beginning of the book and both index pages have been organized at the end of the book
