the republic of ireland football team has often been characterised by opposition managers players and media outlets as displaying the admirable but somewhat intangible attributes of heart and fighting spirit such platitudes can sometimes feel like back handed compliments and representative of an international perspective of irish football as lacking in technical quality this book seeks to present a more nuanced history of the irish team through twelve era defining fixtures dating back to the nation s first involvement in a world cup qualifier in 1934 the matches examined in the book are not necessarily the best performances by irish teams nor indeed are they all positive results however an individual fixture can frame the public perception of a qualifying campaign a managerial tenure or a particular generation of players the story behind a single result or performance can carry a significance that transcends time and it is through this prism that the book explores the evolution of the irish football team in the spring of 1919 uk prime minister david lloyd george wrote the whole of europe is filled with the spirit of revolution there is a deep sense not only of discontent but of anger and revolt amongst the workmen against prewar conditions in some countries like germany and russia the unrest takes the form of open rebellion in others it takes the shape of strikes and of a general disinclination to settle down to work while comparative studies of revolution within the social sciences define revolution in part as necessarily involving mass participation dominant narratives of the irish revolution have left lloyd george's spirit of revolution by the wayside the political content of the revolution is assumed to exclusively be the demand for national independence while a focus on high politics and military elites obscures the ways in which tens of thousands of people participated in diverse forms of popular mobilization this collection of regional and local case studies by contrast shows that a spirit of revolution was widespread in ireland in the period 1917-23
