the newspapers have lately been making large quotations from the poems of mr rudyard kipling they might if they had been so minded have laid under similar contribution the revelation of st john the divine there too with all the imagery usual in apocalyptic literature is to be found a description of vague and confused fighting when most of the kings of the earth come together to fight a last and desperate battle the seven angels go forth each armed with a vial the first poisoning the earth the second the sea the third the rivers and fountains of waters the fourth the sun then out of the mouth of the dragon of the beast and of the antichrist come the lying spirits which persuade the kings of the earth to gather all the people for that great day of god almighty into a place called in the hebrew tongue armageddon translated into our language the account might very well serve for the modern assemblage of troops in which nearly all the kingdoms of the earth have to play their part with few and not very important exceptions it is almost absurd to speak of the events of the past three months as though they were merely incidents in a great and important campaign there is nothing in history like them so far as we are aware in the clash of the two great european organisations the triple alliance and the triple entente we have all those wild features of universal chaos which the writer of the apocalypse saw with prophetic eye as ushering in the great day of the lord and paving the way for a new heaven and a new earth
