Supply chain management (SCM) is the process of managing the flow of goods and services to and from a business including every step involved in turning raw materials and components into finished products. SCM is the handling of the entire production flow of goods or services starting from the raw components to delivering the final product to consumers. A company creates a network of suppliers that move the product from raw materials suppliers to organizations that deal directly with users. Global supply chain management is the set of business processes that enable a value chain to create and fulfill demand for goods and services globally. Today's global supply networks are complex, multitiered, and often include many intermediaries. Supply chain management involves five main functions: engineering, planning, sourcing, fulfillment, and aftermarket services. For example, supply chain management helps ensure vaccines are manufactured and distributed. According to the ASCM Supply Chain Dictionary, supply chain management is the design, planning, execution, control, and monitoring of supply chain activities with the objective of creating net value, building a competitive
