k warner schae i am pleased to write a foreword for this interesting volume particularly as over many years i have had the privilege of interacting with the editors and a majority of the contributors in various professional roles as a colleague mentor or research collaborator the editors begin their introduction by asking why one would want to read yet another book on human development they immediately answer their question by pointing out that many developmentally oriented texts and other treatises neglect the theoretical foundations of human development and fail to embed psychological constructs within the multidisciplinary context so essential to understanding development this volume provides a positive remedy to past deficiencies in volumes on human development with a well organized structure that leads the reader from a general introduction through the basic processes to methodological issues and the relation of developmental constructs to social context and biological infrastructure this approach does not surprise after all the editors and most of the contributors at one time or another had a connection to the max planck institute of human development in berlin whether as students junior scientists or senior visitors that institute under the leadership of paul baltes has been instrumental in pursuing a systematic lifespan approach to the study of cognition and personality over the past two decades it has influenced the careers of a generation of scientists who have advocated long term studies of human development in an interdisciplinary context is my dog with his joyful and carefree life better off than i am do hens in battery cages have worse lives than cows at pasture will my money improve welfare more if i spend it on helping people or if i benefit chickens how can we assess the harm of climate change for both humans and non humans if we want to systematically compare welfare across species we first need to explore whether welfare subjects of different species have the same or rather a different capacity for welfare according to what seems to be the dominant philosophical view welfare subjects with higher cognitive capacities have a greater capacity for welfare and are generally much better off than those with lower cognitive capacities višak carefully explores and rejects this view she argues instead that welfare subjects of different species have the same capacity for welfare despite different cognitive capacities this book prepares the philosophical ground for comparisons of welfare across species it will inform and inspire ethicists and animal welfare scientists alike as well as a broader readership interested in wellbeing animals and ethics besides different views about capacity for welfare across species the book discusses animal capacities moral status harm of death whether bringing additional well off individuals into existence is a good thing and practical implications of these topics for counting and comparing the welfare of animals of different species is higher education a right or a privilege this author argues that all citizens in a free and open society should have an unconditional right to higher education such an education should be costless for the individual and open to everyone regardless of talent a readiness and willingness to learn should be the only qualification it should offer opportunities that benefit citizens with different interests and goals in life and it should aim as its foundational moral purpose to help citizens from all walks of life live better freer lives using concepts and ideas from liberal political philosophy the author argues that access to educational goods and services is something to which all citizens have a right over a full life such goods it is argued play a key role in helping citizens realize self determined goals higher education should therefore be understood a basic social institution responsible for ensuring that all citizens can access such autonomy supporting goods the book examines the implication of this justification of the right to higher education for questions of educational justice political authority distributive justice civic education and personal autonomy
