this is the story of how the united states army responded to the challenges of the end of the cold war by transforming itself into the most capable ground force in the world today it argues that from 1989 through 2005 the u s army attempted and largely achieved a centrally directed and institutionally driven transformation relevant to ground warfare that exploited information age technology adapted to post cold war strategic circumstances and integrated into parallel department of defense efforts the process not only modernized equipment it also substantially altered doctrine organization training administrative and logistical practices and the service culture kevlar legions further contends that the digitized expeditionary army has withstood the test of combat performing superbly with respect to deployment and high end conventional combat and capably with respect to low intensity conflict and the counterinsurgency challenges of iraq and afghanistan full colour illustrations throughout center of military history publication cmh 70 118 1 describes the achievement from 1989 through 2005 of the united states army of a centrally directed and institutionally driven transformation relevant to ground warfare that exploited information age technology adapted to post cold war strategic circumstances and integrated into parallel department of defense efforts combines participant observation with solid scholarship explains what happened in the transformation of the army over the past twenty years why it happened and who was involved presents the hard choices accepted risks processes of decision making and institutional results the u s army is such a vast institution that change appears to occur slowly if at all yet when looking back only a few decades an intelligent observer can only marvel at how much the army has changed indeed transformed in the period since the end of the cold war this reconfiguration has been due less to any posited revolution in military affairs than to the careful and methodical investment of army leadership in thoughtful doctrinal refinement innovative experiments and the intelligent adoption of specific technologies evolution is harder to see and track than revolution but the result of those decades of thoughtful and gradual change is that the u s army flexible adaptable and deadly stands as the most capable ground force in the world today kevlar legions the transformation of the u s army 1989 2005 argues that from 1989 through 2005 the united states army attempted and largely achieved a centrally directed and institutionally driven transformation relevant to ground warfare that exploited information age technology adapted to post cold war strategic circumstances and integrated into parallel department of defense efforts the process not only modernized equipment it also substantially altered doctrine organization training administrative and logistical practices and the service culture the resultant digitized expeditionary army was as different from the late cold war army as the late cold war army was from that of the early cold war or from the mobilization based armies of world wars i and ii kevlar legions further contends that the digitized expeditionary army has withstood the test of combat performing superbly with respect to deployment and high end conventional combat and capably with respect to low intensity conflict kevlar legions the transformation of the u s army 1989 2005 is the story of how the united states army responded to the challenges of the end of the cold war by transforming itself into the most capable ground force in the world today it argues that from 1989 through 2005 the u s army attempted and largely achieved a centrally directed and institutionally driven transformation relevant to ground warfare that exploited information age technology adapted to post cold war strategic circumstances and integrated into parallel department of defense efforts the process not only modernized equipment it also substantially altered doctrine organization training administrative and logistical practices and the service culture kevlar legions further contends that the digitized expeditionary army has withstood the test of combat performing superbly with respect to deployment and high end conventional combat and capably with respect to low intensity conflict and the counterinsurgency challenges of iraq and afghanistan argues that from 1989 through 2005 the united states army attempted and largely achieved a centrally directed and institutionally driven transformation relevant to ground warfare that exploited information age technology adapted to post cold war strategic circumstances and integrated into parallel department of defense efforts the process not only modernized equipment it also substantially altered doctrine organization training administrative and logistical practices and the service culture the resultant digitized expeditionary army was as different from the late cold war army as the late cold war army was from that of the early cold war or from the mobilization based armies of world wars i and ii the book further contends that the digitized expeditionary army has withstood the test of combat performing superbly with respect to deployment and high end conventional combat and capably with respect to low intensity conflict this book presents the u s army asymmetric warfare group awg as an example of successful change by the army in wartime it argues that creating the awg required senior leaders to create a vision differing from the army's self-conceptualization change bureaucratic processes to turn the vision into an actual unit and then place the new unit in the hands of uniquely qualified leaders to build and sustain it in doing this it considers the forces influencing change within the army and argues the two most significant are its self-conceptualization and institutional bureaucracy the work explores three major subject areas that provide historical context the first is the army's institutional history from the early 1950s through 2001 this period begins with the army seeking to validate its place in America's national security strategy and ends with the army trying to chart a path into the post-cold war future the army's history is largely one of asymmetric warfare the work thus examines several campaigns that offered lessons for subsequent wars some lessons the army took to heart others it ignored as the awg was a direct outgrowth of the failures and frustrations the army experienced in Afghanistan and Iraq the book examines these campaigns and identifies the specific problems that led senior army leaders to create the awg finally the work chronicles the awg's creation in 2006 growth and re-assignment from the army staff to a fully fledged organization subordinate to the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command in 2011 to its deactivation this action resulted not from the unit's failure to adapt to a post-insurgency army focusing on modernization rather it resulted from the army failing to realize that while the awg was a product of counterinsurgency it provided the capability to support the army during a period of great strategic and institutional uncertainty the U.S. Army before 1945 did not have and did not need a formal readiness reporting system after World War II however it found itself committed to large scale deployments in Europe and in the Pacific commitments that with the cold war would continue for the next 45 years the demands of this war along with the wars in Korea and Vietnam made it vital that senior service leaders had accurate information on the readiness of units in the regular army the Army National Guard and the Army Reserve the methods for measuring readiness however soon became and then remained a matter of contention equally contentious was the use of data generated by readiness reporting systems both within the service and by others outside the service the end of the cold war did not end these disputes indeed the years between that victory and the start of the second Iraq war in 2003 were a time of heightened concern over military readiness and how to assess it provided by publisher this fast-paced and compelling read closes a significant gap in the historiography of the late cold war U.S. Army and is crucial for understanding the current situation in the Middle East from the author's introduction my purpose is a narrative history of the 1st Infantry Division from 1970 through the Operation Desert Storm celebration held 4th of July 1991 this story is an account of the

the u s army is such a vast institution that change appears to occur slowly if at all yet when looking back only a few decades an intelligent observer can only marvel at how much the army has changed indeed transformed in the period since the end of the cold war this reconfiguration has been due less to any posited revolution in military affairs than to the careful and methodical investment of army leadership in thoughtful doctrinal refinement innovative experiments and the intelligent adoption of specific technologies evolution is harder to see and track than revolution but the result of those decades of thoughtful and gradual change is that the u s army flexible adaptable and deadly stands as the most capable ground force in the world today kevlar legions the transformation of the u s army 1989 2005 argues that from 1989 through 2005 the united states army attempted and largely achieved a centrally directed and institutionally driven transformation relevant to ground warfare that exploited information age technology adapted to post cold war strategic circumstances and integrated into parallel department of defense efforts the process not only modernized equipment it also substantially altered doctrine organization training administrative and logistical practices and the service culture the resultant digitized expeditionary army was as different from the late cold war army as the late cold war army was from that of the early cold war or from the mobilization based armies of world wars i and ii kevlar legions further contends that the digitized expeditionary army has withstood the test of combat performing superbly with respect to deployment and high end conventional combat and capably with respect to low intensity conflict
