the parliamentary standards bill is a legislative response to the public anger in recent weeks about the conduct of some members of both houses of parliament in relation to financial matters the committee is particularly concerned by the hasty manner in which policy making has taken place with negligible public consultation and the subsequent fast tracking through parliament of a bill which will have major constitutional implications the bill also represents a step change in external regulation the bill breaks with the convention that each house of parliament regulates its own affairs free from intervention by the courts this is a profound change which has the potential to give rise to conflict between parliament and the courts the implications of which require very careful examination the excessively speedy policy making and consideration of the bill has prevented proper examination of these and other legally and constitutionally complex questions governments should resist falling into a temptation simply to see something done which is no substitute for properly prepared policy and legislation
